Letter of Recommendation 2

To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing this letter to recommend Jordan Thomas for admission to your college. I have had the pleasure of knowing Jordan as their Honors History teacher during their junior year.

What strikes me most about Jordan is their ability to see the world from multiple perspectives. In a subject like history, which is often fraught with bias and one-sided narratives, Jordan consistently pushes to understand all sides of a story. This open-mindedness extends beyond academic coursework; it's a vital part of who they are.

Jordan is a member of our school's Art Club and brings the same level of commitment and creativity to their academic endeavors as they do to their art. Their unique outlook has made them a key participant in study groups, offering insights that might not have been considered otherwise.

Although Jordan's SAT scores and GPA may not immediately stand out, their contributions to the classroom and community are immeasurable in numbers. They have a knack for connecting abstract concepts to real-world applications, which adds significant value to class discussions and activities.

Jordan also maintains a blog on urban exploration, which not only attests to their writing and documentation skills but also reflects their curiosity and respect for environment and space. They engage with the community through art and exploration, sharing their experiences and discoveries with others.

I am confident that Jordan will thrive in a college environment that values diversity of thought and encourages intellectual curiosity. Their open-mindedness, creativity, and commitment to community engagement make them a highly desirable candidate for any institution.

Sincerely,
Jordan Thomas's Honors History Teacher
